

Daycare Providers,

Have you ever experienced the frustration and hassle of a day care parent who...

- didn't pay for your valuable services?
- left without giving required notice, leaving you unprepared for the opening?
- bounced a check, costing you time, hassle, and money?
- refused to pay a co-payment?

If you are like most in the childcare field, you are a caring, compassionate person.

You tend to be more patient than most and genuinely love what you do... You provide care, nurturing and support to children in many ways every day. Like most childcare providers, your compassion and patience probably automatically transfers to the daycare parents whom you see every morning as they bring their children to your childcare center or in-home daycare facility.

You naturally build relationships with these parents.

You care about their children and them... it doesn't take long for you to make friends, chat about day to day things, and share heartfelt conversations...

These wonderful relationships are the biggest reason daycare providers struggle with payment issues... It's so hard to balance that friendship and caring with "being the bad guy" who has to be firm with payment policies.

You have your own life, family, and obligations to meet AND a business to run, but it's still very difficult to deal with the uncomfortable issue of excuses, late payments, bounced checks, and the false accusations that sometimes arise when a parent gets angry over you standing your ground about payment for childcare services you've provided.

Because of your compassion and the nature of your work, daycare is the sometimes the first place parents scrimp when it comes to paying on time. One late payment or bounced check leads to bigger and bigger bills for the parents.

They sometimes feel it's easier to just walk away rather than pay... After all...
You ~ being the great person you are ~ probably won't do anything about it anyway.

Right?

Wrong!

You can still be the compassionate person you are...
AND stand up for your rights as a daycare business owner and childcare professional.
